The New Episcopal Bishop.

The Rev. Dr. Charles E. Woodcock, of Detroit, was consecrated Bishop of Kentucky in that city Wednesday. The service was according to the established rites of the Protestant Episcopal church and Dr. Woodcock received the vestments of his office from Bishop Tuttle, presiding Bishop of the United States. The personality of the new Bishop is reported from his old home as follows:

"The Bishop-elect is of spare but wiry physique and he has the requisite amount of nervous energy to accomplish a great deal and to overcome seemingly unsurmountable obstacles.

"He is in no sense a sensationalist and is naturally inclined to conservatism. However, he has strong convictions and is never at a loss for words to forcibly express his sentiments in regard to church or public affairs.

"He is a lover of clean sports and it is no unusual thing in the summer time for him to participate in a game of baseball with his son and the youths of the parish.

"In his pulpit Dr. Woodcock talks to his people as man to man, urging clean, manly life and allegiance to the causes of the Savior. His earnestness carries with it conviction.

"To meet Dr. Woodcock is to gain an indelible impression, not only as to his personal appearance, but as to his mentality. His delicate, strong face, his deep, expressive eyes, his unquestionable sincerity are not to be forgotten. His quick and accurate comprehension and sound common sense display themselves in even a casual meeting, while a more intimate relationship will show a deep knowledge of theological and classic literature together with a clear insight in current history."

Did you say you had no fire insurance? Well go and see W. O. Hinton. He has the right kind. (tf)

AMUSEMENTS.

AN EXCELLENT COMPANY.

The Margaret Neville Company continues to uphold the standard of excellence in their performance at the Grand Opera House, each production seems to eclipse the preceding one. Last night "Carmen" was the bill and a better production has not been seen on the local stage for a long time. To-night the late Augustine Daly's masterpiece, "Leah, the Forsaken," will be the attraction. No true lover of the drama can afford to miss this gem. It is a classic in ever sense, and in the title role, Miss Neville gives her greatest impersonation of the week in the part of Leah. She has created a perfect furore in every city where she has played it, and she is ably seconded by the management in making this a feature performance as no expense has been spared in furnishing special and beautiful scenery and effects for this production. New and bright specialties will continue to be seen each night and a special matinee will be given to-morrow at which the great comedy drama, "A Woman's Revenge," will be the offering.

"OLD SI STEBBINS."

There is much that is quaint and laughable in the New England rural play, "Old Si Stebbins," which will be presented at the Paris Grand, Wednesday, February 1st. The play is clean and wholesome, the mainstay being the golden rule. The milk of human kindness makes its lessons valuable. Old Si devotes his life to doing good to others in his awkward, homespun way. Dan Darleigh acts the old Maine farmer. Hazel Darleigh is the hoydenish orphan who is adopted by Old Si. There are numerous specialties, and the stage settings, one of which shows the shocks of fodder in a cornfield, are certainly very handsome. A strong feature of the show is the Si Stebbins orchestra. A street parade is given at noon.

A Farmers' Club Organized.

M. W. Neal, state organizer for the bureau of agriculture, addressed a large audience of farmers at Bowling Green and organized the Warren County Farmers' Club. A membership exceeding 100 was enrolled.

Indictment of Breathitt Men.

The grand jury of Fayette county has indicted Judge James Hargis, County Judge of Breathitt county, Ed Callahan, Sheriff of that county, Alexander Hargis, ex-Senator from that Senatorial district, Elbert Hargis, brother of the County Judge and ex-Senator, and Jesse Spicer, a Deputy Sheriff under Sheriff Callahan, for conspiring to kill James Cockrell, City Marshal of Jackson, who was shot from the court house window in Jackson over two years ago. The indictment is found by the grand jury of Fayette under the statute of Edward VI, giving jurisdiction to a court in either the county in which a crime was begun or in which it was finished. James Cockrell was shot in Breathitt county, where the conspiracy, if there was a conspiracy, was formed and the crime begun, and died in Fayette county, so that under this statute the court in either county has jurisdiction. William Britton, now on trial in the Fayette Circuit Court, is, as far as we know, the first man who has ever been indicted and tried under this statute.

LATER REPORT.

Chief of Detectives Walter Marshall went to Jackson with bench warrants to arrest the five men indicted and upon his arrival there found that a Jackson Magistrate had issued warrants against them and refused to let Marshall have the prisoners. He wired back to the officers of the Fayette Circuit Court and received the following reply:

"Breathitt county warrants should not prevent you in serving the warrants you have. Arrest the men, if possible without bloodshed, or report to this court why you have not served the warrants."

The supposition is that the Breathitt county warrants were hurriedly prepared and served in order to head off the Fayette officers and prevent that court from taking jurisdiction of the case.

OCULIST.—Dr. H. C. Bowen, the oculist, will be at A. J. Winters & Co.'s on February 9th, 1905.

FIVE INDICTMENTS

Judge and Senator Hargis, Elbert Hargis, Ed Callahan and James Spicer.

ARE CHARGED WITH CONSPIRACY.

The Investigation Grew Out of the Killing of James Cockrill, City Marshal of Jackson.

The Hargises Are Wealthy and Prominent in Kentucky Politics—A Bench Warrant Issued For the Men's Arrest.

Lexington, Ky., Jan. 26.—A special grand jury found indictments against James Hargis, county judge of Breathitt county; Alex Hargis, former state senator; Elbert Hargis, of Jackson, brother of the other two; Ed Callahan, sheriff of Breathitt county, and Jesse Spicer, a former deputy sheriff under Callahan, all charged with conspiring to bring about the death of James Cockrill, city marshal of Jackson. Cockrill was shot from a window of the courthouse at Jackson in July, 1902. He was brought to this city and died in a local hospital. The Breathitt grand jury failed to indict. Under the old English law which has recently been sustained by the court of appeals indictments may be found in another county for a crime which is begun elsewhere and completed in that county. Under this law Bill Britton was indicted on the charge of killing Cockrill, his third trial now in progress here.

The Men Indicted Are in Jackson. All of the men indicted are now in Jackson, Senator Hargis, whose home is in Winchester, having come from this city to Jackson. Bench warrants have been issued and a special bailiff will serve them.

The Hargis brothers are wealthy and prominent in politics. Judge Hargis is a member of the democratic state central committee. The two brothers, James and Alex, operate a large department store at Jackson and have extensive timber and land interests in the mountains. Judge Hargis, Senator Hargis and Ed Callahan are defendants in the $100,000 damage suit brought by Mrs. J. B. Marcum, widow of the United States commissioner, who was assassinated in the Jackson courthouse in May, 1903. She charged that they conspired to have her husband killed and sued for $100,000 damages.

The Marcum Case.

The jury awarded her $8,000 against Judge Hargis and Callahan. They have been granted an appeal from this verdict to the court of appeals. Mrs. Marcum also was granted an appeal of the case, as it affected Senator Hargis and Judge B. F. French, Curtis Jett, nephew of the Hargis brothers, is serving a life sentence for the murder of Marcum. An appeal is pending in the case of a death sentence imposed for the assassination of Cockrill. Tom White is under life sentence for killing Marcum, and pending a decision of the court of appeals on motion for rehearing he is in jail at Covington.

A FIREBUG.

He Made a Confession To the Brooklyn Police.

New York, Jan. 26.—Harry Potter, a grocer's clerk, who was arrested in Brooklyn, according to the police, has confessed that he was the firebug who has kept the residents of the Park Slope section of Brooklyn in a state bordering on terror for the last five months. Potter says he started the fires while in the basement of the apartment house to get orders or deliver groceries. His only explanation of his acts was that it "gave him a little fun to see the engines run."

During the past 18 months there have been no less than 100 incendiary fires within a radius of half a dozen blocks in the Park Slope section.

FIRE IN NEW YORK.

Nine Frame Houses in the Bronx Were Destroyed.

New York, Jan. 26.—Fire destroyed nine frame houses in Cauldwell avenue, the Bronx, and threatened more than 50 in the immediate neighborhood before the firemen succeeded in getting the flames under control. Hundreds of men, women and children were hurried out of their beds in the scantiest of clothing. So far as can be learned no one was seriously injured.

Election Judge Sentenced.

Denver, Jan. 26.—Preston N. Wigginson, an election judge, who pleaded guilty to voting in a precinct where he did not reside, was sentenced to jail for 90 days. This is the first sentence imposed by the criminal court for election frauds.

Grillo Ousted From the Presidency. Chicago, Jan. 26.—After a heated contest lasting from 10 o'clock in the morning to 10 o'clock at night, J. E. Grillo was ousted from the presidency of the American Association and was succeeded by Joseph D. O'Brien, of Milwaukee.

Pledged Their Support.

Philadelphia, Jan. 26.—A meeting of Russians under the auspices of the Russian Revolutionary Aid society was held at the home of Simon Dubin in this city. Speeches were made by several of those present pledging their support.

ANNIHILATING A REGIMENT.

How a Body of Russian Troops Went Down Before a Charge of the Japanese.

For half a mile it was possible to trace the roadway as it wound along the base of a little amphitheater, then it was lost in the standing millet. Along this track a weary column was plodding. The For-eigner looked, and then rubbed his eyes. It was World's work. It was a Russian column. There was no misinterpreting the white tunics and blue breeches, no mistaking the figures which loomed colossal in comparison with the little fellows with whom he lay. A counter-attack? His trained eye told him that the dejected movement of the dragged column savored not of aggression. The men's rifles were across their backs and their pale, worn faces were whiter than their blouses. There was no speech no sound other than the squelching of their boots in the mire. A surrender? No man came forward to arrange quarter for men too tired to be whipped and beaten to defend themselves. No Japanese went forward to recommend to them such mercy as they had earned. A misdirected column? That was it. The thought just flashed through the For-eigner's brain, when the voice of the chef-de-bataillon rose superior to the silence. The rifles crashed like one. The column stopped dead in its tracks. The leading fours were so close that the foreigner could see the look of amazement, horror and despair upon the blanched features of the wretched man. Then, as the magazines ground out their leaden avalanche, the leading fours tried to surge backward, tried to save themselves in flight. It was awful—the rifles made no smoke to hide the hideous spectacle; it was like the execution of a bound man. Flight prevented retreat or retaliation. The little Japanese, shouting and jeering, were now upon their feet and redoubting the rapidity of their fire. With blanched cheek and set teeth the foreigner watched this terrific curtain to the bloody drama in which he had participated. He saw the white tunics melting into the mud like snow under a sleet shower. He saw a mad rush toward the cornstalks balked by the intensity of the fire. He saw such of the Russians as remained upon their feet throw their arms into the air and stretch out their naked hands toward the rifles that were annihilating them. Their shrieks were in his ears. Then as if by magic the firing stopped. A little figure—he knew it well, the whole battalion knew it—leaped in front of the firing. For a moment the face was turned toward the foreigner. The mildness, the culture, the charm were gone; animal ferocity alone remained. It was Kamimoto as he would have been 100 years ago. His two-handed sword was bare in his hand. He raised it gleaming above his head and dashed down into the amphitheater. Like a pack of hounds his men streamed down after him. The foreigner covered his face with his hands.

CITY BUILT ON RUBIES.

In Burma There Is a Community That Rests Upon Gem-Enriched Soil.

Mogok, a city in the northern Shan States of Burma, is literally "built upon rubies," says the Booklovers Magazine. The earth in the streets and inclosures "is of crystalline limestone formation, containing numerous veins of gem-bearing gravel." The numerous houses and pagodas represent so many rubies converted into cash. The houses of Mogok are practically the dwelling places only of ruby-mines and merchants and their families, and each pagoda is a votive offering to the gods, for luck! "It is said," continues this writer, "that a king would be ruling at Mandalay to-day if it had not been for the rubies, and Mogok still have been an obscure village with a few score of inhabitants had there been no rubies in the vicinity, whereas now there are about 40,000 people of every color and hue—the Englishman, American, the Frenchman and German, the Armenian, pure native and Jew."

Mogok is so far removed from the ordinary tourist's track that few venture there who are not on business bent, owing to the difficulty of travel in Burma. "Fair promise of gain will tempt me to go anywhere in search of it. Some go to burning South Africa for diamonds, and others go to frozen Alaska for gold. Even so men go to Burma for rubies. For the ruby ranks next to the diamond among precious stones, and holds a premier-ship all its own among the colored gems with which men and women love to bedeck themselves. It is not strange, therefore, that many should search for a stone that is a brother to the amethyst, the sapphire and the topaz, and which not infrequently outranks the diamond in value, being, in fact, the gem of gems of the east. A flawless five-karat ruby will bring twice as much as a diamond of equal weight, while a ten-karat ruby will bring three times as much, and cannot be bought for less than $5,000."

Sets a Hard Pace.

Brown—Yes, he is. You see he gets out and cleans the snow off his walk every morning, and the rest of us have to do the same.—Cleveland Leader.

What She Considered Natural.

Mr. Crimmonbeak—I like to see a man act natural.

Mrs. Crimmonbeak—Well, I don't. I hate to see a man make a fool of himself.—Yonkers Statesman.

Our Language.

Nordy—Saddins is all broken down. Butts—Feels bad about it, too, I suppose?

"Yes; he's all broken up."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Five of Our Presidents Died While in Office

Three Stricken Down by the Hands of Assassins—Two Succumbed to Illness After Short Terms of Service.

ALTHOUGH the nation's natal day was the Fourth of July, 1776, the existence of our present form of government, under the constitution, dates from the 30th of April, 1789, nearly 13 years later. It was then, the constitution having been adopted, that Gen. George Washington was inducted into the office of president of the United States, his inauguration taking place in the city of New York, which was the seat of the new government. Since then our nation has had 26 presidents. Five of that number were "accidental" presidents, that is, they succeeded to the position because of the death of the president while in office.

William Henry Harrison was the first president of the United States to die while he was serving in that capacity. He was elected in 1840. He took his seat as president on March 4, 1841. One month thereafter, April 4, 1841, he died.

His death was due to pleurisy fever, and his sickness was only of a few days' duration. John Tyler, his vice president, succeeded him in office. President Tyler served the remaining three years and 11 months of Harrison's term. The remainder of his days was passed at his beautiful home, Sherwood Forest, in Virginia, devoted to his books and entertainment of the many guests that gathered around him. He was an advocate of slavery, and when the war of the rebellion broke out he sided with the south. He was a member of the confederate congress, and his death occurred while he was serving as such, in Richmond, on January 17, 1862. Zachary Taylor was the next president to die in office. He had served one year and four months of his term. His death occurred on July 9, 1850. He contracted a cold and was only sick five days. It is said that worry had much to do with the cause of his death. He was a soldier. He knew but little about politics, and after he assumed the presidency's office the politicians and the office seekers made his life a burden. Millard Fillmore, his vice president, was then inaugurated president. Four years after leaving the office Mr. Fillmore was the candidate of the "know-nothing" party for president, but was defeated. His death occurred at Buffalo, N. Y., on the 13th of July, 1874, of paralysis.

The tragic death of Abraham Lincoln, the first of our martyred presidents, took place early on the morning of the 15th of April, 1865. He had entered upon his second term as president but a little more than a month before. The hand that brought death to him was that of an assassin, John Wilkes Booth. It was while seated in a box in Ford's theater at Washington on the night before that the fatal shot was fired. After the death of President Lincoln, the robes of chief executive fell upon his vice president, Andrew Johnson. His administration was a stormy one. He differed with the leaders of his party in regard to policies, and an attempt was made to impeach him in the senate. Six years after he retired from the presidency he was elected senator of the United States from Tennessee. He entered upon his duties as senator on March 5, 1875. In the latter part of the following July he went to Tennessee to visit his daughter. The day after arriving there he was stricken with paralysis, and three days afterward, on July 31, 1875, he died.

It was also an assassin's bullet that ended the life of James A. Garfield, who in 1880 was elected president and took his seat on March 4, 1881. He had been in office a little less than four months when, on the morning of the 2d of July, 1881, at the railroad depot in Washington, as he was about to take the train for New York on a trip through New England, he was shot by Charles J. Guiteau, a crank, who, on the trial of his case in court, was shown to be a disappointed office seeker. President Garfield's wound was fatal, but he lingered for over two months, his death occurring on September 19, 1881. He was succeeded by Chester A. Arthur, who had been vice president. President Arthur sought the nomination for president, it succeeded himself, but failed in getting it. His death occurred on November 18, 1886, in New York city of Bright's disease.

The story of the shooting of President William McKinley, the last of our presidents to meet death by an assassin's hand, is too well known to deserve detailed mention here. He was shot on the afternoon of September 6, 1902, at Buffalo, N. Y., while attending the Pan-American exposition, on the grounds and in the presence of thousands of people. The assassin was an anarchist named Leon F. Czolgosz. President McKinley died eight days afterward. On the afternoon of the day of his death, at Buffalo, Vice President Theodore Roosevelt was sworn in as president, and has since been such. His unexpired term as "accidental president" will end March 4 next. He will then enter upon a new term as president, elected to the office last November by the people.

But, in the history of our country, death has not been the only means of elevating vice presidents to the position of president. In the early days of the government, the vice presidency was a stepping-stone to the presidency. John Adams, vice president with Washington, succeeded him as president. Thomas Jefferson, vice president with Adams, became president. Martin Van Buren, vice president with Jackson, was president after the latter's term had expired. From Van Buren's time, however, until the present no man has stepped from vice presidency to the office of president by election.

The same "hoodoo" has also seemed to follow the office of secretary of state in these latter days. It was not so in the days of our grandfathers. Thomas Jefferson, Martin Van Buren, James Madison, James Monroe, John Quincy Adams and James Buchanan all served as secretary of state before their election to the presidency. However, Henry Clay, who was secretary of state under John Quincy Adams, was twice defeated for the presidency after he had received the nomination, and the same was true of James G. Blaine, who was secretary of state under James A. Garfield. Indeed, men who have held cabinet positions and have been vice presidents have often sought the presidency, but, with the exceptions named above, have failed in securing the coveted office. The president's cabinet and the United States senate are not now good stepping-stones to the presidency of the nation.

FRANK DILDINE.

Ships That Passed at Sea. Samuel J. Elder, the Boston lawyer, who came to Brooklyn not long since to tell the New England society of that borough of the heaven of Puritanism, relates this story of a dialogue between the skippers of two vessels which met at sea:

"What ship is that?" roared the skipper of a little Gloucester schooner, hailing a great full rigged ship. "Reindeer, Calcutta to Boston!" was the answer from the captain of the big ship. "Who are you?" "Schooner Dart, from Gloucester," answered the schooner's skipper. "How long you out?" "One hundred and fourteen days," was the answer. "How long you out?" "All night!" returned the Gloucester man, and he put his helm to port and scurried off to meet the rising dawn.—N. Y. Tribune.

Lovely Gorge.

Mrs. Newrich (back from the honeymoon in Switzerland)—Do you remember, dear, that lovely gorge up in the mountains?

Mr. Newrich—I do. It was the squar-est meadow I ever ate.—Tit-Bits.

And Now They Don't Speak. Clara—Mr. Castleton tried to put his arm round my waist last night. Maude—Couldn't he get it round?—Tit-Bits.

A GREAT SUFFERER

LAY HELPLESS AND SPEECHLESS FOR HOURS AT A TIME.

Sinking Spells, Headaches, Rheumatism, All Caused by Poor Blood—Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

When Mrs. Williams was asked for some details of the fearful illness from which she had so long suffered, she spoke as follows:

"Ever since I had nervous prostration, about thirteen years ago, I have had periodical spells of complete exhaustion. Any excitement or unusual activity would throw me into a state of helplessness. At the beginning my strength would come back in a moderate time, but the period of weakness kept lengthening until at last I would lie helpless as many as three hours at a stretch."

"You were under medical treatment, of course?"

"Yes, when I became so bad that I had to give up my housework, in May of 1903, I was being treated for kidney trouble, and later the doctor thought my difficulties came from change of life. I was not only weak, but I had dizzy feelings, palpitation of the heart, misery after eating, hot flashes, nervous headaches, rheumatic pains in the back and hips. The doctor did me so little good that I gave up his treatment, and really feared that my case was incurable."

"What saved you from your state of hopelessness?"

"In July of 1903 I had a very bad spell, and my husband came in one day with a little book which told of remarkable cures effected by a remedy for the blood and the nerves, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. He bought a box for me, and that was the beginning of my return to health. My appetite grew keen, my food no longer distressed me, my nerves were quieted, and my strength began to revive."

"How long did you take this remedy?"

"For two months only. At the end of that time I had regained my health and cheerfulness, and my friends say that I am looking better than I have done for the past fifteen years."

Mrs. Lizzie Williams is now living at No. 418 Cedar street, Quincy, Illinois. The pills which she praises so highly, cure all diseases that come from impure, impoverished blood. If your system is all run down, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the very best remedy to take. Any druggist can supply them.

In the Court of Appeals in a response to petition for rehearing in the case of S. W. Hager, Auditor, vs. R-bert Franklin, Commonwealth's Attorney, Chief Justice Hobson delivered an important opinion involving the fees of Commonwealth's Attorneys, holding that fees collected in one year can be applied to his salary in another year for the same term, provided his fees have not reached the amount of $4,000, the limit which he can receive. The decision also holds the same rule as to fees of County Attorneys and Circuit Clerks, and directs their payment through the Auditor as heretofore in the construction of the law.

PROTECT YOURSELF AGAINST GERMS.

People With Weak Stomachs Most Liable to Catch Disease.

When the stomach and digestive organs are weak, the food does not digest, and there is a sour, slimy, fermenting mass, making it an ideal spot for the disease germs to multiply.
The only way to protect yourself against disease germs is to strengthen the stomach and digestive organs, and Mi-o-na is the only agent, so far as is known, that will accomplish this.

The ordinary medicine that is taken for indigestion and stomach troubles is advertised to act upon the food alone, and hence can give no more than temporary relief. Mi-o-na is a certain cure in all cases of stomach troubles, excepting cancer because it enables the stomach and digestive organs to act in the way Nature intended they should. Drugs cannot digest the food; they simply decompose it.

If you suffer with distress after eating, pains in the head, chest, sides and back, belching of gases, an undigested food, bad taste in the mouth, dizziness, or vertigo, heartburn, variable appetite, sick headaches, spots before the eyes, and have a general feeling of despondency, weakness, and debility you should at once strengthen the stomach and digestive system by the use of Mi-o-na. There is no liquid, no alcohol, no spoonful of Mi-o-na. Just one simple tablet out of a fifty cent box before eating, and your stomach will soon become so strong and healthy that you will be germ proof. Ask Clark & Co. to show you the guarantee under which they sell Mi-o-na; costs nothing unless it cures.

The Kentucky Legislature.

The Kentucky House on Tuesday adopted the Drewry resolutions, expressing the sense of the body to be that the present Capitol site is unsuitable for the new building. The vote stood forty-three for to twenty-eight against the resolution. This is considered a test vote by members favoring the selection of a new site. The Republican members held a caucus and resolved to oppose any measure at this session. They will, of course, join hands with the Democratic members who seem bent on making the extra session a failure by being against anything Governor Beckham favors. The location of the Capital is a non-partisan question, and we believe the Governor is working to the best interest of the State in this matter. The members, Republican or Democratic, who are voting to block any legislation at this session are showing the people the very lowest grade of politics that exist. We are not surprised at the Republican members, for they are only carrying out Republican principles, but the Democrats engaged in this blocking business should remember their duty and do it. There is no reason why this question should not be settled at once and stop the heavy expenses that the people will have to pay. For such members as referred to above to be drawing five dollars per day out of the State Treasurer is worse than stealing.

The Right Man In The Right Place.

The caucus which re-established John Sharp Williams' leadership of the minority too firmly to be again questioned during the present session was one that served the party well. In freedom from unthinking partisanship, in breadth of view, in common sense and an understanding of national characteristics and sectional temperament, Mr. Williams is better equipped for leadership than any other man in either party in the House. His democracy is sound in principle and practice, his judgment clear and his Americanism unquestioned. The Democrats, in continuing him as their leader, have committed themselves to a policy in which patriotism, rather than politics, will control, but in which lies the one hope of future success.

Increased Number of Unemployed.

A public report of more than ordinary interest was recently given out, but somehow or other the administration organs seem to have overlooked it, either as a news feature or as a mere literary production. The report was submitted by New York charity officials, and the statistics showed an increase of 40 per cent. in the number of unemployed who are forced to seek assistance over the number one year ago. Ten years ago the closing down of a little shop and the discharge of a half-dozen employes was enough to throw the average Republican organ into a spasm. Their nerves have grown stronger lately—or their eyes much weaker.

Mrs. Mary Rogers will be hanged at a State prison in Vermont on February 5. She murdered her husband. The horror of hanging a woman seems to have spread over the State, and to some extent over the Union. The Legislature threshed the matter out, and an unsuccessful attempt was made to enact a law that would save women from such a penalty. Gov. Bell, however, has withstood so far all importunities for a communication of sentence, and says:

"No matter what may be my personal views on capital punishment, I do not consider that I have a right to interfere with the laws of the State. I was elected by the people to enforce, and not set aside the laws of the Commonwealth."

Booker Washington, after entering the Kansas Senate chamber on the arm of the Governor, was refused admittance by every hotel at the capital, and was saved from spending the night on the streets only by the kindness of a negro politician. There is only one Democrat in the Pennsylvania Senate. He must feel as lonely as the two Republican members of the Texas Legislature. But there is this advantage in such a condition of things. There is never a division of sentiment on the part of the minority on any question that may come up for consideration.

This Settles the Matter.

The Kentucky Republicans in Washington had a conference with the President on Wednesday in regard to Kentucky patronage. It was agreed to what offices Yerkes and Ernst were to control, &c. The Washington correspondent also says: "An important feature of the case is that former Gov. Bradley is left entirely out in the cold. Last week, however, the President appointed Mr. Bradley's friend, J. L. Earlywine, Postmaster at Paris. Ernst and the organization recommended J. D. McClintock for the position, but he failed to land, and Earlywine has been confirmed by the Senate. The Post-office Department to-day received a protest from some of the organization men against giving Earlywine his commission. Postmaster General Wynne said that as Earlywine had been confirmed the case was closed, and he accordingly signed the commission, and he will shortly take charge of the office. This is said to be about the last piece of patronage Mr. Bradley is to get."

Touching Remarks.

There was a large crowd in attendance at the funeral of Mr. James T. Davis, Tuesday afternoon. The remarks of Rev. Dr. F. J. Cheek, of Louisville, former pastor of the deceased for eighteen years, were very touching and a just tribute to the deceased. In the course of his brief talk Dr. Cheek said that Mr. Davis at one time had asked him how long he had been in Paris. He replied, "thirteen years." Mr. Davis then said, "I have heard every sermon you have preached during that time."

Dr. Cheek further said, that when he first came to Paris, eighteen years ago, James Hall, James McClintock, Dr. Joe Fithian, B. F. Harris and James T. Davis were the officers of the First Presbyterian Church, Mr. Davis being the last of them to pass over the river to reap the reward of a true Christian life.

Four Below Zero.

Paris was visited Tuesday night and Wednesday morning by the coldest weather it has experienced in several years. The big thermometer in front of A. J. Thursday morning this same thermometer registered one below, and the mercury played around the zero mark until after eight o'clock. We are promised some relief to-day from the weather bureau.

Proper Precaution Not Taken.

We are informed by Chief of Police Hill that it is not altogether the fault of the police force that so many burglaries are being committed in Paris. It is the fault of people who do not take proper precaution in locking up their houses. Almost in every instance of the late burglaries committed it developed that there were no window catches on the windows at all. You can readily see how easy it is to walk into a large number of our houses without making the slightest noise. The shutters in some of the cases not even being closed and in other cases not having a catch on them. The people should be more careful about such matters and maybe the number of burglaries will diminish.

WHY?

Why leave for the evening shadows
The duties of early day?
Why grudge until bleak December
The kindness we owe in May?
'Tis time for the bud and blossom
When skies are serene and blue;
Who soweth in chilly autumn
Reaps harvest of bitter rue.

Thy frown or thy harsh unkindness,
As bitter as draught of gall,
May sting thee as scourge of nettles
Ere lovers' night's sable pall;
Beware lest thy tardy kisses
Fall madly on lips of clay,
Or hear thou this morn couldst comfort
Be pulseless ere close of day.

Be kind while life's morn still lingers:
Thy love and thy helpful hands
Shall be as the founts of water
To wanderer o'er desert sands;
A word from the heart in kindness,
May pierce the gray mists of pain,
And arch o'er the hills eternal
The rainbow of hope again.

CHAPTER XXIX.—CONTINUED.

She had been settling evenly, but at last she went down with a mighty plunge. For a moment the sea was black with heads—men struck out frantically only to be sucked under in the mighty vortex that followed her disappearance. The last glimpse Grafton caught of the group on the poop-deck, de Kersaint still stood with folded arms looking forward. The marquis took off his hat and looked up toward the flag. "France! France!" he murmured. He made a fine end for a soldier. The English saw it fluttering on the surface of the water for a moment as the mighty spars sank slowly down, and then the waves washed over it. The ship was gone. Not a cheer was heard from the English decks; a groan of horror broke from her men, in fact, as they witnessed this sinister effacement of a ship.

Scarcely a minute had elapsed since the last broadside was fired, and now it was over. A few bits of wreckage, a few desperate men clinging to them, perhaps a score out of 800 gallant souls who had manned and fought her a moment since—that was all! Grafton gave one agonized glance aft. He thought in the darkness he could make out the forms of Jean-Renaud and his wife in the water drifting on. Another moment and they were lost to view.

"Have we a boat that will swim?" he cried in despair to the master.

"Not one is left at the davits, sir," answered that officer, sadly.

"Breakers! Breakers ahead!" roared one of the officers forward.

They were right on the Cardinals.

"Up with the helm! Hard up!" shouted Grafton, instinctively. But the sluggish ship steered slowly. For a few moments she held her way toward the rock. They thought she was doomed also. For himself Grafton did not care, but for his men! They waited in awful apprehension, but at last she slowly swung around and glided by, and peril was escaped.

Right next to her was the French ship Le Juste, spitting fire and shot from her guns at the Torbay.

"We will attack that ship!" cried Grafton, recklessly turning the prow of his vessel toward her. "Fire on her. Let her have it, men!"

But there was no response to his command. His guns were silent.

"Beg pardon, sir, the magazines were flooded and all our powder was wetted when we came so near foundering," reported the gunner who had just come on deck.

"Ah, I had rather have gone down on the Cardinals than be thus helpless!" murmured the young commander, quite beside himself with the disappointments and anxieties of the hour.

"Sir, sir, some dry powder is found!" cried another, running up on the instant.

"Engage! Engage, then!" screamed Grafton, fiercely. His mind was so overwhelmed by the catastrophe that he could find no relief save in action, and presently from the iron muzzles of his hot guns once more rang out the deadly discharge. A savage desire to slay, to kill, had supplanted every other emotion in Grafton's heart. He stood, wild-eyed and despairful, a madman on his own deck, inciting his men to action.

After half a dozen broadsides Le Juste, badly riven and shattered, sheered off and attempted to withdraw, having had enough of it. Grafton, however, was not to be shaken off. He pursued the retreating French ship with implacable ferocity, working every gun that would bear upon her.

The last shot from Le Juste struck the Torbay on the quarter just as she hit the reef. It sent a shower of splinters inboard, one of which struck Grafton in the breast and hurled him over the rail to windward. He caught feebly at a backstay, shouted a command, and the next moment a falling spar dashed him into the sea.

For him and for all the rest the battle was over.

CHAPTER XXX.

WHAT WAR MEANT IN THAT DAY ON THE SEA.

IN ONE of the cabins of Le Formidable lay Captain Philip Grafton. He had been badly wounded by the splinter (a piece of timber six feet long) which had hurled him to the deck of the Torbay just as she went on the rocks. The moment in which he had been thrown overboard would have been his last had it not been for the heroic devotion of old Slocum.

Seeing the helpless condition of his commander he had plunged into the water after him, and with superhuman strength, skill and courage had supported him until he had been able to lay hold of one of the floating spars of the Torbay. Slocum had lashed Grafton to the spar and had clung desperately to it himself during half the night. After being tossed about in a sickening way for hours, the piece of timber, with its two exhausted occupants, had been washed astward Le Formidable's cables. Slocum's cries had attracted the attention of Midshipman La Perouse, afterward the celebrated navigator and discoverer, on board her, and the two Englishmen had finally gained her decks.

The old man was not much the worse for his adventure, but Grafton was in a frightful condition. The blow, the shock, the strain of the combat, the mental agony he had suffered over the loss of his wife, had reduced him to a pitiable state. He was delirious with fever. As he lay in the berth he fought over the battle, heard once more the roar of the guns, witnessed the sinking of Le Thesee again, saw once more his white-clad wife—

Le Formidable was a veritable charnel-house. The surgeon and his mates were utterly overwhelmed by the unheard-of demand upon their services. Nearly every officer on the ship had been killed or wounded, and five hundred men in addition, before she had struck her flag. She had, indeed, been fought gallantly—nay, terribly! The ward-rooms and cabins were filled with groaning, raving men, many of whom had suffered amputation the day before, and had the tourniquets still screwed on the stumps! In some cases the blood vessels were not taken up until the third day after the battle. The gun-room, the stowage, and every available space between the guns on the lower deck, even the cradles in the hold, to say nothing of the cockpit, were filled with men in every stage of wound and agony. The ship's medical staff were entirely unable to cope with the situation. They worked like heroes, nor eating, nor sleeping, nor taking any rest, doing their best.

The chaplain had been killed, and the suffering and dying were without the consolations and comfort of their religion even. With every plunge of the ship, the wounded, unsecured, unprovided with cots or hammocks (for there were so many that there was no place to lay them except upon the bare decks), were rolled about and thrown against each other with results too sickening to dwell upon. One hideous yell from every part of the ship mingled with the scream of the tempest. The men prayed to die, and some of the unwounded broke down and became crazed by the awful sights and sounds.

The officer who commanded the French marines upon her, stated to the English prize lieutenant that every man of his detachment had been killed or wounded, that he had served in the army for thirty years, and had been present on the bloody field of Fontenoy, but he had never witnessed such a scene of carnage. In fact, all the surgeons could do in capital operations for hours during and after the battle had been to "amputate, smooth stumps and apply tourniquets."

Surely never on any ship was exhibited so much of the finished horror of warfare as on this unlucky vessel. The 1,600 men who had gone down on Le Thesee and Le Superbe were to be envied in comparison with the fate of this unfortunate crew. It seems to be a modern phrase to say that "war is hell," but Le Formidable presented an ancient example of its eternal truth. Her captors gazed upon the melancholy ruin they had wrought, and to them came an old saying with a new force:

"Blessed are the peacemakers!"

CHAPTER XXXI.

THE WOMAN BEREFT.

TO RETURN to the Maidstone. She carried in her cabin a passenger—nay, two. The frigates, while not daring to take part in the action, had kept well up and as near as they could to the contending ships. Hatfield had naturally marked the Torbay. He had seen the loss of Le Thesee, and had put his ship over toward the place where she had gone down. As he drew near he had ordered out his boats, and at a fearful risk—for it was a most perilous undertaking to launch a boat in such a sea—he succeeded in saving some 20 people from her crew, among them being Countess Anne and old Jean-Renaud.

There were neither accommodation, clothing, nor any other conveniences for the reception of a half-drowned woman on the frigate, yet Hatfield had done his best for her. He had given up his own cabin to her and had made her as comfortable as possible therein, while he beat out to sea during the awful night to save his ship.

Buckets of sand in which had been placed heated shot had raised the temperature of the cabin, and Anne's clothing had at last dried on her person in the warm room. She had been unable to sleep, and with difficulty partaken of food. Her condition was indeed deplorable. She had seen her country's fleet defeated; her grandfather had been most certainly drowned, de Vitre and de Kersaint likewise. The ship on which she had been gone down, although by Jean-Renaud's action she had been spared much of the horror of that awful scene. What had become of her husband she knew not, consequently she was filled with grief on the one hand and apprehension on the other.

Her state of mind, however, was not quite so bad as that of Grafton, for he thought that he had lost her, and she still cherished the hope that she would be able to rejoin him. If she were only assured of his safety and they could be together again in the end, she felt she could bear all the other hardships and losses, terrible though they were.

She was ignorant, of course, of the wreck of the Torbay, as was every one else on the frigate, and Hatfield, who had soon discovered her identity, endeavored to reassure her as to her husband's safety. But it was with a sick heart, indeed, that she stood on the deck by his side, in spite of the storm, wrapped in a boat-cloak which had belonged to Grafton, and which he had left behind in his hasty departure for the Torbay a week ago, while the Maidstone was running into the bay. With him she stared hard at the broken, shattered ships straining at their cables in the storm which swept them on. She marked the three which had been wrecked upon Le Four, two of them dismasted and ruined with the ceaseless waves still pounding them to pieces. She saw further away great bursts of flame and clouds of smoke rising from the two which were on fire and burning furiously.

Hatfield, whose treatment of her had been perfect—she would never forget it—kept by her, supporting her on the uneasy deck of the unsteady ship, intently surveying the scene, too. He did not see the Torbay among those at anchor. As he drew nearer to the group, however, he happened to cast a glance to leeward, and instantly recognized the wrecked ship on Le Four. The involuntary start he gave, as the recognition came to him, attracted the attention of Anne, who turned to him as he stared at the remains of the Torbay. Intuitively she divined that something had occurred, and she gave him no rest until he told her the truth.

It seemed to her that fate could have laid no heavier burdens than those she had already borne, until this last blow came. She would have fallen to the deck had not Hatfield supported her. He endeavored, of course, to comfort her, but without success. Though the Torbay was wrecked, they could see that many of her men remained on her, and she still held together. It was quite likely that Grafton was safe, he urged; in which event she would soon see him.

Nerved by this thought, she summoned her resolution once more, and leaning over the rail gazed at the wreck of her husband's ship, and possibly of her own hope and happiness, as they swept on. She would know all in a short time, she thought; meanwhile she must have the strength to wait a little longer. That wait was to be longer than she dreamed, and of all the demands upon her strength made during the past week it proved the greatest and the hardest to be met.

Hatfield intended to send a boat to the flagship at once, but when he reached a suitable position for anchoring, the seas were running so heavily and the storm blowing so hard it was impossible for him to do anything all that day. Indeed, he had to bring all his seamanship and experience to bear to save his ship. Anne, in a fever of impatient anxiety, had to wait as best she could. Philip might be there on that ship, wounded, dying, she could not get to him; he might be dead, and she, not knowing it, yet alive. Oh, the raging sea, the cruel storm!

She forgot the anger of men which had wrought such havoc, and railed in her heart against wind and wave and tempest. She was almost beside herself. Hatfield, whose anxiety for his friend was also very strong, had the greatest difficulty in calming her. Indeed, he had but little time from his duties. He had to watch his ship constantly. Great are the demands of duty, but great are its compensations as well. If Anne only could have had something to do she could have borne the killing suspense better; alas! she had only to wait. The strength of woman is to wait. Weakness is passive, yet it conquers, or dies, in the end.

For the same reason of the storm no help could be offered the men on the wrecked ships. Some of them made rafts and escaped to the shore, where they were promptly captured, but most of them clung to their vessels until the weather moderated, when they were rescued.

It was not until the gale blew itself out that Hatfield was able to communicate with Admiral Hawke. On the third day after the battle, therefore, the weather at last made it possible for him to call away one of his boats and repair to the flag-ship. Anne went with him, for she had insisted upon going in the first boat that left the frigate. The faithful Jean-Renaud—whose grief for the master he had abandoned (though by that master's order) was not less profound than her own for the husband she feared she had lost—accompanied her. Indeed, the old man would not be parted from her.

Sir Edward Hawke, hearing that there was a woman in the approaching boat, came to the gangway to meet them. The old sailor took off his hat before her and stood with bent head, the wind blowing across his gray hairs as Anne, pale and haggard, but still lovely, followed, and, assisted by Hatfield, clambered up the ladder and stepped upon the deck.

"Sir Edward Hawke," said Hatfield, as he saluted, "allow me to congratulate you on your victory, and then to present you to the Countess de—"

"Pardon, monsieur," said Anne—"Madame Phillip Grafton."

"Is it possible!" cried the admiral.

"My dear lady—"

"Where is my husband, sir?" interrupted Anne.

"Ah, madame, I know not! Yonder upon Le Four lie the remains of his ship. We have had no speech with them for two days. The boats of the Union, however, are now taking off the men. We will have a report presently. But you, madame, where were you, may I ask?"

"I was on Le Thesee, sir, with my grandfather, the Marquis de Chabot-Rohan."

"My poor child!" exclaimed the admiral.

"They are all gone, sir, are they not? Were any of them saved?" she asked him piteously.

"None! None! How terrible for you!"

"Yes, monsieur, and if I have not my husband, I am indeed lost."

"Pray God he may be saved, madame. And how did you escape?"

"This old man," she said, turning to Jean-Renaud, "seized me in his arms, leaped with me into the sea, and Monsieur Hatfield, my husband's friend, picked us up."

"You have done well, my brave man," said the admiral in French, turning to Jean-Renaud, and reaching out his hand.

"No, Monsieur l'Amiral," said the old Breton, shaking his head, tears falling from his eyes, "my master is gone and I am here. He bade me take mademoiselle. He went down with the ship, and I was not there."

"But you saved the mistress," continued the admiral. "'Twas an heroic deed."

"You will not hold him prisoner, sir?" asked Anne anxiously.

"Madame," said Hawke, "he is as free as the air. He shall be set ashore where and when he wills."

"No, Mademoiselle Anne," returned the old man mournfully, "they are all gone of the old house I serve, but you, I must stay with you while I am here. Where you go, I go. I could not live and not serve the de Rohans. I am your man now until the end."

"Be it so," said Anne, extending her hand to him. "I stay here until—until—"

"Will you not come into my cabin?" asked the admiral kindly, "and wait there? I shall have news presently, and it will be brought to you at once."

"No, sir," answered Anne resolutely, "I would rather stay here. I can at least look at his ship."

"A boat from the Union, sir, coming on board," reported the officer of the watch. "There are some of the officers of the Torbay in her. I recognize them."

"Is one of them—my husband?" cried Anne.

"Your husband, madame?"

"Capt. Grafton?" explained Hawke.

"No, madame," answered the young officer, looking at her sadly.

In another moment the first lieutenant of the Torbay stepped up to the admiral and saluted. He was haggard and broken from loss of sleep, exposure, responsibility and anxiety.

"Sir," he said, "I have to report the loss of the ship to the command of which I succeeded on the night of the battle. Capt. Grafton—"

Hawke raised his finger warningly, but before the lieutenant realized the situation Anne grasped him by the arm.

"What of him?" she cried.

The officer looked from one to the other in great bewilderment.

"Speak out now, man," said Hawke impatiently. "The tale must be told now."

"He was washed overboard when we struck Le Four and we have not seen him since, sir."

Without a moan or cry Anne sank to the deck at the feet of the old admiral. Stopping over her slight form he lifted her up himself as easily as if she had been his own child—his daughter. He carried her to his cabin, where he sent the surgeon and the old chaplain to her. They were not able to do much with her. When consciousness came back it brought such agony to her that she longed and hoped for death. The admiral visited her again, told her he had directed inquiries to be made as to whether any of the other ships had picked her husband up, bade her not despair—in short, the grim old warrior was as tender of her as a father, as gentle to her as a woman.

[To Be Continued.]

Nothing More to Be Said.

A Birmingham judge the other day received an unusual reply from one good lady whose husband owed a tradesman a certain amount.

"Where is your husband?" asked the registrar.

"He's away sir," came the reply.

"Yes, I know he's away. What is he by trade?"

"A tube-drawer, sir."

"And what is he doing now?"

"He's doing a month, sir."—Stray Stories.

By Dr. Orison Swett Marden.
What thou wilt,
Thou must rather enforce it with thy smile,
Than how to it with thy sword.
—Shakespeare.

“WHY did our friend never succeed in business?” asked a man returning to New York after years of absence; “he had sufficient capital, a thorough knowledge of his business and exceptional shrewdness and sagacity.” “He was sour and morose,” was the reply. “He always suspected his employees of cheating him, and was discourteous to his customers. Hence, no man ever put good will or energy into work done for him, and his patrons went to shops where they were sure of civility.”

Many people work their hands off, metaphorically speaking, and deny themselves the common comforts of life in their efforts to succeed, and yet render success impossible by their cross-grained, disagreeable manners. They repel patronage and business goes to others who are really less deserving but more agreeable.

Bad manners often neutralize even honesty, industry and the greatest energy, while agreeable manners win in spite of other defects.

Good Manners Currency.

It has been well said that no one can escape the bondage of good manners. Its fetters may be silken, but they are as strong as those that wheel the earth along in its orbit. And, while all must obey its laws, those laws furnish a currency with which the beggar provides himself therewith, he is better off in all the markets of the world than the prince who has it not.

Many a man owes his position or fortune largely to a fine manner. “Thank you, my dear; please call again,” graciously spoken to a little beggar girl who bought a penny worth of snuff, proved a profitable advertisement, and helped make Lundy Foote a millionaire.

Perhaps nothing besides downright honesty contributes so much to one's success in life as agreeable manners, the genuine courtesy that is based on good nature.

Other things being equal, of two persons applying for a position, the one with the best manners gets it. A rude, coarse manner creates an instantaneous prejudice, closes hearts and bars doors against us.

“The difference between a well-bred man and an ill-bred man,” said Dr. Johnson, “is this: One immediately attracts your liking, the other your aversion. You love one till you find reason to hate him; you hate the other till you find reason to love him.”

Dr. Johnson on Courtesy.

Uncouth and domineering as he was himself, yet the good doctor, in common with all the world, was attracted by the charm of a fine manner in others. Speaking of a man of exquisite courtesy and tact, he said:

“I remarked with what justice of distribution he divided his talk to a wide circle; with what address he offered to every man an occasion of indulging some favorite topic or displaying some particular attainment, the judgment with which he regulated his inquiries after the absent; and I . . . soon discovered that he possessed some science of graciousness and attraction which books had not taught; that he diffused upon his cursory behavior and most trifling actions a gloss of softness and delicacy by which every one was dazzled; and that, by some occult method of captivation, he animated the timorous, softened the superstitious and opened the reserved. I could not but repine at the inelegance of my own manners, which left me no hope, but not to offend, and at the insufficiency of rustic benevolence, which gained no friends but by real service.”

Thousands of professional men, without any special ability, have succeeded in making fortunes by means of a courteous manner. Many a physician owes his reputation and success to the recommendation of his friends and patients, who remember his kindness, gentleness, consideration and courtesy. This has been the experience of hundreds of successful lawyers, clergymen, merchants, tradesmen and men of every class and of every walk in life.

Kindliness of “Sam” Jones.
“Golden Rule” Mayor Samuel M. Jones, of Toledo, O., owed his popularity and success as a public man as well as a business man largely to his great kindness of heart and courtesy to all men. A story illustrating these qualities is worth telling:

Upon going to his factory one morning during a hard winter Mr. Jones found affixed to the entrance door a sign: “No help wanted.” He had the obnoxious sign immediately removed, remarking: “Men who apply for work should have at least a decent reception; maybe we can help them by kind words, even if we have no work for them.”

There is no doubt that Gov. John I. Bates, of Massachusetts, also owes much of his success to his gracious manner. He was a college mate of the writer's, who well remembers how even in those early years his genial spirit, strong personality and courtesy won him a large place in the hearts of all his teachers and associates. It was the same when he left college. His winning address and affability, combined with ability and a good character pushed him right ahead of men of greater experience and perhaps equal ability.

Young men often think, if they happen to be in a position of more or less importance of authority, that they may be as gruff and rude as they please without injury to themselves (it does not occur to them to consider the feelings of others). But in this they are greatly mistaken.

Rude to Grover Cleveland.
Grover Cleveland once taught a young man of this type a lesson which is to be hoped was of service to him.

When Alonzo B. Cornell was governor of New York he had a clerk who often remained seated while callers at the capital were obliged to stand while they transacted business with him. One day a delegation headed by Mr. Cleveland, who was then a young attorney, called to plead for the life of a condemned man. After the clerk had kept the members of the delegation waiting for two hours in the outer hallway he admitted them to the governor, who finally refused to interfere in behalf of the condemned man. One year after Mr. Cleveland was elected governor of New York state. A few days after his election he visited the executive chambers, Gov. Cornell showed him around, and asked him if there was anything he would like to have done in advance before he took office.

“Yes,” said Mr. Cleveland, “there is just one thing you can do for me, if you will, and that is to remove the clerk who kept me waiting outside so long when I was last here. It may teach him a lesson in politeness.” The clerk was removed.

A man's position, no matter how exalted it may be, is no excuse for rudeness or lack of courtesy. The accident of being a superintendent, manager, or overseer does not give you the right to abuse those who, being less fortunate than yourself, happen to be under you. The humblest man or woman in your employ may be infinitely your superior (as many a servant is far superior to his or her millionaire employer), and in reality much more successful than yourself. Gentleness and consideration for others, not arbitrary selfishness, are the touchstones of all true greatness.

Courtesy as Bank Asset.

The late George G. Williams, president of the Chemical National Bank, of New York, who was for nearly half a century the virtual head of that great institution, placed the highest value on courtesy as a success factor.

“I have always made it a rule of the bank,” he said, “that its employees must be courteous to every one. Many an important customer is lost to a bank through the incivility or neglect of an employee. We act on the principle that an ounce of politeness saves a ton of correction, and that no institution can become so great or independent as to successfully ignore the rules of courtesy. I cannot too emphatically impress upon young men the absolute indispensability of politeness. In this bank the officers and clerks are always civil to whosoever enters the doors, and the example thus set clerks and messenger boys coming in here has borne good fruit, as we have been told by their employers. If I had 20 tongues I'd preach politeness with them all—for long experience has taught me that its results are tangible and inevitable. It is the Aladdin's lamp of success.”

Some one has pithily remarked: “What is the good of being good if you look like brass?”

A good heart is more desirable than wealth or fame or any material advantage. But even goodness is often made repulsive by a harsh, offensive manner. Even animals are sensible of the difference between a kind thing done in a gracious, kindly way and a kind thing done in a rude, ill-mannered way. It has been observed, for instance, that if you throw a bone to a dog he will run off with it in his mouth, without any expression of gratitude or appreciation. But call the dog to you, pat him on the head, let him take the bone from your hand and his tail will wag with joy and gratitude.

“Cut” Diamonds Best.

It is not enough to be a diamond in the rough, whose value is known only to your friends. The diamond must be cut and polished in order to bring out its beauty and brilliancy and enhance its fine quality. Do not flatter yourself that because you have a good heart you will get on in the world in spite of bad manners. Appearance is all-powerful. The first impression has opened or closed the door of a great opportunity to many a man. It is uphill work for a man or woman with hard, disagreeable manners to succeed.

“Manners! What's the use of manners?” exclaimed one of that class of Americans who have become so brutalized in the scramble for money that the finer graces of life have no meaning for them. “There's no money in manners, is there?” he continued, addressing the gentleman who had introduced the subject, and who considered good manners one of the first essentials to success. “We're too busy here to pack books of etiquette around with us. If there was anything to be made out of manners—which there isn't—we'd be so polite over here that French dancing masters would look like stockyard employees compared with us.”

This boor was utterly mistaken in his estimate of courtesy as capital. A fine manner is a fortune in itself. Many young men and women started in life with no other capital and succeeded. It attracts hosts of friends; it gives credit; it creates a good impression; it makes a reputation. The fine mannered are wanted everywhere. As superintendents, managers, traveling men, private secretaries—as employees in every capacity—they are in demand.

“One of the head men of a great establishment,” says Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, “told me that he would as soon think of sending out to represent his house a man who was utterly ignorant of his business as one who was ill-bred, coarse, rude or forgetful of polite manners.”

“Courtesy to Patrons.”

One of New York's greatest merchants attributes his prosperity largely to just and courteous treatment of his customers. In answer to the question: “What do you consider as the chief factor in the building up of your immense patronage?” the head of one of the largest stenographic firms in this country replied: “Courtesy to patrons. No matter how well qualified a stenographer may be in other respects, she will not be given a place in this establishment unless she adds to her other qualifications the charm of an amiable manner.”

In every station, in every department of life, young men and young women are carving out successful careers for themselves largely because of their courteousness and agreeable demeanor.

On the other hand, we see men and women of ability “detracked all along life's pathways, owing to their repellent manners and bearing.”

Courtesy is to business and society what oil is to machinery. It makes things run smoothly; it eliminates all jars, friction and nerve-racking discord and noise. There is nothing else which will so quickly open the door to opportunities, to society, to the hearts of all.

Of course, it is a priceless boon to be born with a smooth temper, a kindly disposition and a suave manner, but all of these may be acquired even by those who have not inherited them. The desire to please, the disposition to be kind and obliging, courteous and gracious on all occasions to all sorts and conditions of people may be cultivated by the most uncouth. And there is nothing which will yield richer rewards in after life than the cultivation of these qualities in youth.

Who misses or who wins the prize?
Go, lose or conquer as you can;
But if you fail, or if you rise,
Be each, pray God, a gentleman.

QUEER MEXICAN ETIQUETTE

United States Consul Writes to Washington About Some Native Customs.

There is a wide latitude in the subjects on which United States consuls make official reports to the authorities in Washington. For the most part they are kept within the lines of commerce and trade matters, and have a distinct value to merchants and manufacturers who are interested in foreign markets. Consul Headen, at Pueblo, Mexico, however, in a report just at hand at the department of commerce, has taken a step hitherto untried, says the New York Times. He writes of etiquette as he sees it in Mexico. His view is not altogether complimentary to the people among whom he is earning his official bread. He says:

“It requires temerity and no small amount of self confidence on the part of an immigrant to invade many of the communities of Mexico. The man, however, who comes from the United States dares enter anywhere, and feels that he should be received as an honored guest. This, however, is the land of ananias-to-morrow—not for purposes of prostration, as many erroneously suppose, but to learn who you are, what you are, and what's your business, and which is the path of interest and gain.

“A stranger might easily be ostracized, isolated, and debarrued upon coming among such communities, if, owing to his habits, his life, or some idiosyncrasy of manner, he failed to come in touch with them, to gain their confidence and to secure their kindly sympathies. A good letter of introduction from some near friend of theirs, which speaks you fair, is of great value, accredits one at once, and obliterates manana. The newcomer makes all advances. Mme. Calderon de La Barca, the wife of the minister of Spain to Mexico, writes: ‘There is one piece of etiquette entirely Mexican, nor can I imagine whence derived, by which it is ordained that all new arrivals, whatever their rank—foreign ministers not excepted—must in solemn print give notice to every family of any consideration in the capital that they have arrived, and put themselves and their homes at the disposition of the residents, failing in which rule of etiquette the newly arrived family will remain unnoticed and unknown.’

Was Well Posted.

“Yes, sir,” said the village grocer. “I take the big weeklies to keep track of the world's affairs and the big city dailies to keep posted on what is going on in this country.”

“But don't you take your home paper?” asked the drummer.

“None.”

“But you certainly ought to feel interested in local affairs.”

“Oh, I know everything that goes on. My wife belongs to the woman's clubs and three church societies, one of my daughters works in the millinery store, and the other is in the delivery window at the post office.”—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Best Ideas Come of Emotion.

It is easy to laugh at the man who makes “copy” out of his greatest joys and woes; but it is inevitable that he should do so if he is going to make good “copy” at all. The stock-in-trade of the writer is his ideas, and he cannot be ignorant that his best ideas come to him through his emotions—that is, through his most painful and most pleasurable experiences.—London Spectator.

NEW YEAR'S DAY AT MANILA

The Governor's Reception Is a Popular and Most Interesting Social Function.

The principal event in Manila on New Year's day is the reception at the governor's palace. It is a brilliant affair, and is one of the largest and most cosmopolitan gatherings of the year, says an account in the Detroit Free Press.

The palace is a rambling old two-story building on the very bank of the Pasig river and surrounded on the other three sides by a beautifully kept garden of 30 acres. The entrance to the grounds is through a high and stately wrought iron gate at which a policeman is always stationed.

On New Year's day, as on the occasion of all the large receptions, of which there are many, carriages are in line for blocks, and a large posse of policemen is necessary to keep the wheels from getting into a hopeless tangle. The New Year's receptions are usually held from 5 to 7:30, but when an evening function is held the trees about the grounds are filled with colored lanterns, and as one drives slowly through the curved roadway leading to the port cohere the whole scene suggests a bit of fairyland. It is possible, also, to enter the grounds from the river side, and those who possess launches usually arrive that way to avoid the crowd.

A policeman stands at the broad door, which is on a level with the ground and is surmounted by the Spanish coat-of-arms in high relief—a dignified and impressive relic of monarchical ownership. And a few rods to the left in the grounds a band is stationed, sometimes one of the military bands, and again the constabulary—a fine organization made up of Filipinos and led by an American negro—a graduate of two eastern colleges.

Through the door one enters a large vestibule, the walls of which are entirely covered with American flags of great size. The quartermaster's department is drawn upon generously, on all of these festive occasions, and the building is filled with the red, white and blue in the heroic sizes that drape so well over large archways and areas.

A broad staircase like that of a public building leads to the living rooms upon the second floor, where the reception takes place. All of the rooms are of great size, and the first one entered, though very large, is only a gateway to the others, as the crowd naturally gravitates in the direction of the veranda. Some interesting paintings hang in this room, however—the one that attracts the most attention being a life-sized portrait of the queen regent of Spain.

Gov. and Mrs. Wright and the others of the receiving party stand in the state drawing-room. The walls are finished in a plain deep shade of red, and the only ornaments hung upon them are huge oval shaped gold-framed mirrors. The only other furnishings are stately, high-backed, teak wood chairs, delicately carved, and surmounted by the coat-of-arms of Spain. The floors in this room are especially beautiful, though all of the floors in the palace are of broad, highly polished wood something the color of our black walnut. The state drawing-room, later on, is used for dancing, and an orchestra for that purpose is stationed in the hall just outside the door.

A broad veranda surrounds three sides of another large drawing-room, and overlooks the garden and the picturesque Pasig river, with the moon hovering above in its own romantic way. Punch bowls are stationed at different points, and China boys in long white linen gowns reaching to the floor, or sometimes in brilliant satins, are called here and there for ices or other refreshments.

A billiard and smoking-room is at one end of the veranda; and at the opposite side of the house is the dining-room—square, and of immense size. It is one of the handsomest rooms in the palace and the color scheme is deep green, which sets off well the beautifully carved black wood furniture. At the table, in the center of the room, one or two of Mrs. Wright's friends pour tea, and from the various sideboards and buffets can be had all of the dainty refreshments usually served on such occasions.

At these functions the Filipino women usually display all of their diamonds, and many of them have fortunes in necklaces. It is a brilliant and interesting assemblage, but, though an American affair, the atmosphere is distinctly foreign, French, Spanish, German, English, Tagalog and various other languages in minor quantities blend into a veritable babel of tongues. Every shade of complexion is on view from coal black to white; and the costumes range from the flowing robes of the various Catholic orders to the brilliantly embroidered costumes of the devotees of Confucius. The gowns of the American women are usually of the flimsiest of materials, and only a very lightweight wrap, or possibly a thin silk scarf, is all that is necessary while passing through the streets on January 1.

Everybody is at the palace on New Year's day, and everyone feels that he is welcome, for Gov. and Mrs. Wright, both of whom are exceedingly popular, are fortunate in having an easy and happy faculty of extending genuine cordiality.

Monks in Philippines.

In a recent speech the Spanish Senator Montero Rios declared that the Philippine islands had been ruined by 6,000 monks. In 1834 nearly all the monks in Spain were assassinated on one day. To-day their number again exceeds 50,000, and is growing rapidly. They give the children a medieval education, and compete in many branches of industry with the populace, which is becoming so incensed, the senator said, that he did not feel sure that the tragedy of 1834 might not some day be repeated.

Women in Our Hospitals

Appalling Increase in the Number of Operations Performed Each Year—How Women May Avoid Them.

Going through the hospitals in our large cities one is surprised to find such a large proportion of the patients lying on those snow-white beds women and girls, who are either awaiting or recovering from serious operations.

Why should this be the case? Simply because they have neglected themselves. Ovarian and womb troubles are certainly on the increase among the women of this country—they creep upon them unawares, but every one of those patients in the hospital beds had plenty of warning in that bearing-down feeling, pain at left or right of the womb, nervous exhaustion, pain in the small of the back, leucorrhoea, dizziness, flatulency, displacements of the womb or irregularities. All of these symptoms are indications of an unhealthy condition of the ovaries or womb, and if not heeded the penalty has to be paid by a dangerous operation. When these symptoms manifest themselves, do not drag along until you are obliged to go to the hospital and submit to an operation—but remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has saved thousands of women from surgical operations.

When women are troubled with irregular, suppressed or painful menstruation, weakness, leucorrhoea, displacement or ulceration of the womb, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation of the ovaries, backache, bloating (or flatulency), general debility, indigestion, and nervous prostration, or are beset with such symptoms as dizziness, lassitude, excitability, irritability, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, “all-gone” and “want-to-be-left-alone” feelings, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy.

The following letters cannot fail to bring hope to despairing women.

Mrs. Fred Seydel, 412 N. 54th Street, West Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—“I was in a very serious condition when I wrote to you for advice. I had a serious womb and ovarian trouble and I could not carry a child to maturity, and was advised that an operation was my only hope of recovery. I could not bear to think of going to the hospital, so wrote you for advice. I did as you instructed me and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; and I am not only a well woman to-day, but have a beautiful baby girl six months old. I advise all sick and suffering women to write you for advice, as you have done so much for me.”

Miss Ruby Mushrush, of East Chicago, Ind., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—“I have been a great sufferer with irregular menstruation and ovarian trouble, and about three months ago the doctor, after using the X-Ray on me, said I had an abscess on the ovaries and would have to have an operation. My mother wanted me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a last resort, and it not only saved me from an operation but made me entirely well.”

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such troubles. Refuse to buy any other medicine, for you need the best.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice and medicine have restored thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde by Mr. John McCracken and Miss Gertrude McCarthy supported by the Southern Stock Co., promises to be the crowning play of the season. Mr. McCracken, who is an actor of rare merit, received his early training under E. D. McLean and Miss Marie Prescott, who during their stage life, were considered among the greatest exponents of the classic and modern drama, and the crowning success of his whole stage career is his masterly interpretation of the dual character of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Miss McCarthy, who is a decided brunette, and strikingly handsome and attractive, essays the role of Alice, the Vicar's daughter, and is said to give an excellent portrayal of that most difficult but beautiful part, and her love scenes with Dr. Jekyll are said to be charming. The company is good and the entertainment promises to be the best seen here this season. At the Opera House, Monday night, January 30th.
